Our Feelings Change As Our Outlooks Do

By Dr. R. Pletsch

The war in the Ukraine has developed a deeper sense of patriotism among many of our immigrant neighbors. I have met with several small groups that at one point left their former homes and land because it was simply better for their people to live here in the USA than any other place in the world. This, of course, is not true for many people who were born with the proverbial silver spoon in their mouths. I don't know many of those people.

I've met several people who never thought much of the old world. Though political ramifications have changed their opinions in many cases. These people seldom talked of back in Europe because they had fought sometimes on the wrong side in WWII.

That was where they were born, you joined the military or went to jail. But now, in that part of the world you either ran away or fought the Russians. It is not always easy deciding what is best for your family. I talked with a young couple that, by their standards, was a mixed marriage. She was from Ukraine and he was from Poland.

Many reading this article would not think that is a big deal. But in the 40's, they were on the opposite side in WWII. I was told that the cousins all get along because they feel American. While some have deeper feelings usually because of some death in the family, luckily this generation each other as sees Americans.

They now have small flags in their house from many countries because most of the youngsters that came here after WWII intermarried with all nationalities. You can be proud of your heritage or what your distant relatives are doing now to protect their country.

When this war is over, through the grace of God, we will return to one nation under God and realize that we all feel differently at different points in our lives, but be grateful that our ancestors had the ability to come thousands of miles and make a new home here. Don't think it's wrong if they have a flag alongside the American flag. We have many in our household.

The Chicago Zoological Society, which manages Brookfield Zoo, to announces the birth of a male South American tapir calf on May 22nd. Zoogoers will be able to see 11-year-old mom Sorghum and her yet-tobe-named calf indoors at the Pachyderm House. Once the weather warms a little, they will have access to their outdoor habitat, located on the north side of the building.

Following a 13-month gestation, Sorghum gave birth to the approximately 20-pound calf. Throughout her pregnancy, the zoo's veterinary staff was able to monitor the fetus with regular ultrasounds. To accomplish this volunbehavior from tary Sorghum, animal care specialists used positive reinforcement to desensithe 550-pound tize mother-to-be to the sound of the ultrasound machine, the smell of rubbing alcohol and gel used on the ultrasound probe, and the feeling of the probe on her belly. Sorghum arrived at Brookfield Zoo in September 2020, and Sonny, the calf's sire, a few years earlier in 2017.

Baby tapirs are born with white stripes, which serve as an excellent camouflage. The stripes begin to fade after a few months, and are gone by 6 months of age. The calf will nurse from its mom as long as milk is being produced. It will reach full size at about 18 months of age, and are considered mature at 2 to 4 years old.

Tapirs have thick skin and are classified as a pachyderm. The South American tapir is one of four species that lives in the Americas, with adults reaching around 2.5 to 4 feet tall, and 6 to 8 feet long. Their streamlined bodies make them excellent swimmers, and they can also run fast in short bursts. The species has a distinctive crest on the top of the head and a mane that runs between their forehead and shoulders. They have a prehensile snout that is used to reach leaves and fruit, and large teeth for grinding up their food.

Those interested in helping care for the tapirs at Brookfield Zoo can contribute to the Animal Adoption program. For $35, a recipient receives the Basic Package, which includes a 5-inch x 7-inch color photograph, personalized certificate of adoption, tapir fact sheet. Animal Adoption program decal, and invitation to the exclusive 2022 Animal Adoption summer
